What the Biden administration is likely to do differently?

So what will Biden do? (insert “may” or “likely” before all of these)

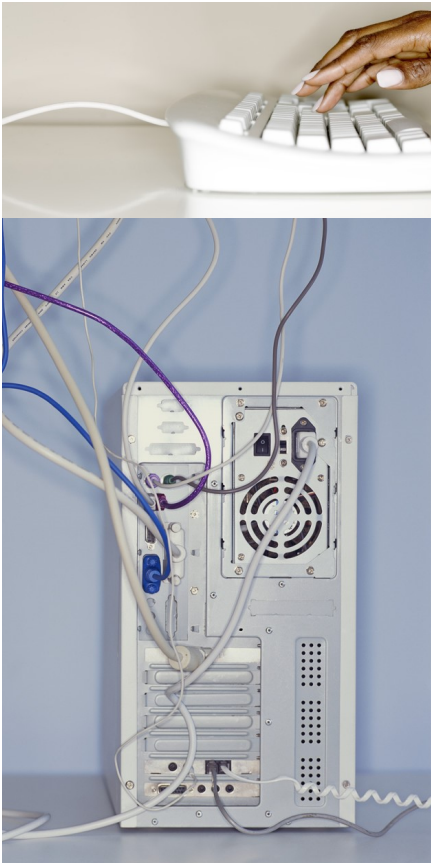

- Restore the union/agency cooperation forums.
- Push mildly, if non-consistently by year, for pay increases.
- Install more rank-and-file and union friendly people at the Federal Labor Relations Authority and its Federal Services Impasse Panel.
- Give unions back their official time and equipped office space.

Ease relocation and other family issues for military members.

Revoke executive orders on contracting bargaining, firings and official time. Unions also expect he’ll repeal more recent and controversial orders on Schedule F for policy-making or -advocating career feds, and diversity and inclusion training.

Spotlight on Leadership Training:

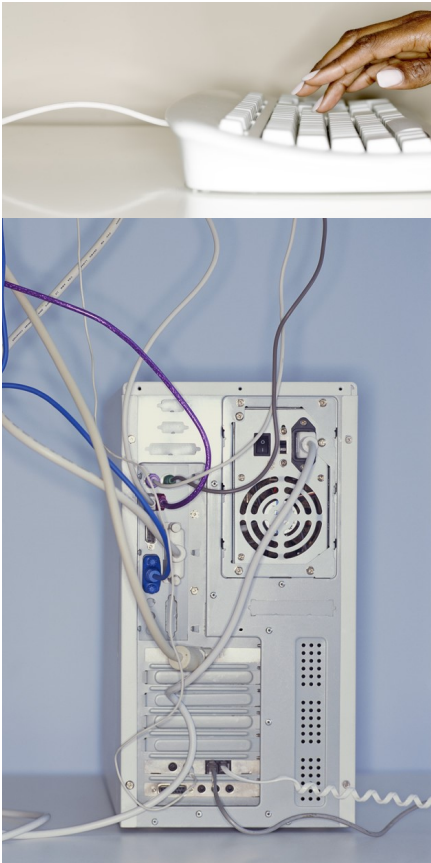

Senior Executives Association Presents, The Future of Government Leadership is Now

This three-day virtual leadership summit is designed to empower participants to take ideas about the future of work and apply them to today. Between the pandemic, the shift to fully remote work environments, changing economy and talented thinkers, the ideas that drive how work and leadership will be handled in the future are being tested immediately. The Government's leaders are being challenged to meet this new work dynamic head on – which may require different ways of thinking and being.
